

GETTING THROUGH

Year of release: 1929 • Screenplay: Jim Gerald

Essentially a burlesque on the new "talkie" phenomenon,¹ Getting Through is a silent comedy film accompanied by off-screen dialogue, including the voices of its three Australian stars - Jim Gerald, Essie Jennings and Phyllis Du Barry. The film's genesis can be traced back to 1928 when Gerald, by then one of Australia's most popular vaudeville and revue comedians travelled to America hoping to establish his career outside Australia. While in Hollywood he co-wrote and produced several two reel films including Getting Through. After returning to Australia in early-1929 Gerald toured that film as part of his live stage shows. First exhibited in Adelaide on 2 March the audience was led to believe the picture was a talkie. When the screen was raised at the film's conclusion Gerald, Jennings, Du Barry and members of Gerald's revue company could be seen still seated at a table with megaphones and scripts in hand, having provided all the dialogue live.²

The storyline depicts the troubles of an Australian family as they attempt to pass through an America customs office. "The inimitable Jim Gerald," writes an Adelaide Advertiser reviewer, "is held back and even when he appears as grandma is refused admission. When he gets through the audience is treated to a surprise view of studio life, and if the talkies ever repeat what is said behind the scenes somebody will be killed in the rush for the early doors"³

Getting Through was reportedly filmed at the Texard Studios, located on Santa Monica Boulevard, Hollywood. The American actors identified to date were John Lutzmann, Marion Mace. The film's first known public screening/performance in Australia was as a support to Gerald's revusical *Not Likely*⁴ in Adelaide in early March 1929. At the end of July 1929 he included it during his company's minstrel revival at the Fullers' Theatre, Sydney (27 July-2 Aug.). Getting Through was also likely presented during Gerald's New Zealand tour for Tivoli Celebrity Vaudeville in late-1929, and possibly revived during the early-1930s.
